

Monmouth Academy's recently-added Model United Nations (UN) program allows students the opportunity to simulate the proceedings of various organs of the UN and other international and national bodies in a hands-on and dynamic fashion. In preparing for conferences, students must thoroughly research their assigned topics and prepare detailed papers summarizing their assigned country's solutions to some of the world's most pressing issues today. Once at the conference, students work with other delegates from around the globe to write press releases, directives, and resolutions that integrate various proposals. Delegates of Monmouth Academy's Model UN team attend some of the most highly-regarded conferences in the country. Additionally, students have the opportunity to visit schools like Princeton and Georgetown Universities and even visit the embassies of foreign nations. Monmouth Academy's Model UN program is great for anyone who has an interest in history, writing, and/or meeting new people!
